A responsive service by Chaplain Rev. F. T. Hazelwood and the choir of the First Baptist Church followed. The comrades formed a square, inclosing the altar, when the chaplain offered a prayer, closing with the Lord's prayer in concert. The choir chanted a selection and the chaplain read the 90th psalm. Rev. Albert W. Moore, of the Central Congregational Church, delivered an address, of which the following is an abstract:—

The names which have just been read did not belong to persons of great learning or influence. Why are there but thirteen empty chairs before us, when in many a household in this city there is another, equally empty and equally pathetic, which has been vacated during the past year by one who will never fill it again? It is because these men, whose brief histories you have just heard, were more than men, in the sense that they were representatives of a great cause—constituent parts of the mighty force to which we owe the preservation of our government.

I once saw in a collection of historical relics the flag of the American war brig "Enterprise," which floated at the masthead during her action with the "Boxer," on the coast of Maine. Though faded and tattered it was honored for what it had done. It had shed an influence on the sailors who had fought beneath it, and had helped to secure a victory. So these men were associated with a great cause, and we honor them for the glorious success which they helped to win.

It may be well for us to consider what the condition of our country was twenty-six years and more ago, that we may the better realize what the Grand Army has done for it. Among the political constellations it was the one star of the first magnitude which symbolized the right and ability of the people to govern themselves; but how long it would shine was a question which was often asked with mingled anxiety and hope. There were two sources of weakness in it. One of these was the mistaken theory that any State had a right to leave the Union at will. It was clearly seen that if this doctrine were not given up the States were bound together by a rope of sand. The other source of weakness was the institution of slavery. It was believed, even by many good men, to be a disease which could not be cured. So rapid was its growth that it threatened the very life of the Republic.

Both evils culminated at the same time. Then the axe of secession fell upon the bonds of union. Then two great peoples swung far apart, and the call for help was uttered which summoned into existence the Grand Army of the Republic.

Figure to yourselves the sun with one-half of its disc covered with blackness, with a fissure extending across it from side to side, and a world dreading the extinction of daylight. Imagine thousands and millions leaping into the flames to save it. Fancy the heavens filled with noise, with thunder, with flashes of baleful light. Then imagine a profound hush settling down upon the universe, and the glorious sun shining forth once more, without a blot upon it and with the fracture perfectly repaired. Imagine those who were left returning from their work, scorched and blackened by the fiery furnace which they had trodden; and then ask yourselves how they would be regarded by the world whose sunlight they had preserved. The soldiers of the republic were the salamanders who threw themselves into the flames of civil war. They were the men who put down the doctrine of national suicide by the logic of two millions of bayonets. They were the giants who proved that the Union was one and indivisible by the resounding hammer-strokes of the "red artillery."

We are almost tempted to believe that men who could survive so many perils must be clad in armor of proof through which death can drive no dart. But these empty chairs remind us that it is not so. Even the victorious soldier must sooner or later face a foe before whom he must lay down his arms.

But why do I call it a defeat? It need not be so. The true soldier ought to be ambitious to conquer death. Columbus, looking at the obscurity and mystery of the great Atlantic, felt that there must be a world beyond it, and resolved to reach it. So every man, every soldier, ought to feel that there is a land beyond the ocean of death, and to resolve that, with God's help, he will find it. That is an ambition commensurate with the manhood of the men who saved the great republic.

The rocket which rushes aloft and bursts into stars, falls back glimmering, dardling, into the mire. But is that the end? Perhaps not. There may have been a smaller one attached to it, which was set free by the explosion, and is mounting nearer to the heavens while the useless stick which it left behind falls forgotten to the ground. That illustrates the truest ambition. It is not to win glory in this world, and then to sink into dust and nothingness. It is to live so that death will set free a spirit filled with divine fire which will ascend ever nearer to God.

And how is this ambition to be realized? By being soldiers still. By fighting in your own breasts the same kind of battle which you waged in a larger field so many years ago. There is a rebellion in every soul. The passions are in revolt against the conscience. There is bondage in every heart. The will is enslaved by selfish desires. He who puts down this rebellion and frees himself from this bondage is a soldier of God. These chairs will not remind him of death only, but of mortality swallowed up of life. He will be able to exclaim, in all fervency of spirit "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

MEMORIAL SUNDAY.

Gen. Lander Post 5, Commemorates Its Dead of the Year.

Eighteen Vacant Chairs in Front of the Commander.

Impressive Services and an Eloquent Address.

The memorial service at the Coliseum by Gen. Lander Post 5, G. A. R., Sunday evening, was very impressive. About 250 comrades of the post were present, a delegation from Camp 1, S. of V., and about 100 members of Corps 29, W. R. C. The relatives of the deceased occupied seats reserved for them on the right of the Commander. Every available seat was occupied, and the vacant standing room, and the attendance was estimated to be the largest that has ever witnessed one of these memorial ceremonies.

The hall was arranged as for a regular meeting, except that in front of Commander George W. Wilson were eighteen vacant chairs draped with crape, and against which leaned the portraits of the comrades who have died since March 20, 1887. On the altar was a massive floral piece, representing an anchor. Bouquets were on all the officers' stations. The altar was heavily craped in black and white. Two stacks of arms were at the head of the hall supporting the colors of the post, and guards of honor were stationed at the colors.

The audience and post being seated, the services began with the singing of "Memories Sacred and Grand," by the Apollo Quartette—Charles A. Chase, first tenor; William Walden, second tenor; William H. Commander Wilson then said:—"The record is an honorable one, and as the memory of all faithful soldiers of the Republic should be cherished, and their record preserved, I direct that it be placed in the archives of the post for future reference." Then followed a responsive service by Chaplain Hazlewood and the quartette, and the latter sang "Rest, Heroes, Rest."

A hollow square was then formed about the altar, and the chaplain offered a fervent prayer, concluding with the Lord's Prayer, which the comrades repeated in concert. The Chaplain read a Scripture selection, and the quartette sang "Rock of Ages." Rev. F. T. Hazlewood, chaplain of the post, then delivered an address, of which the following is an abstract:—

Commander, Comrades, Relatives and Friends of Our Dead:—

In accordance with the beautiful custom of General Lander Post 5, G. A. R., we are here assembled to-night in a service in memory of our associates, who, during the past year, have been mustered out from the earthly ranks to take their places in the grand review before the Supreme Commander not in fear, but as our ritual has it, in hope that the merciful Captain of our Salvation would receive them into that fraternity, which on earth and in heaven remains unbroken.

The most expressive and impressive part of this ceremony is over. Sacred song, solemnly recited word, united prayer have held in their embrace the names of our dead, while, through it all, the long roll of the muffled drum has sounded like an echo of the past, causing thoughts, tender and manly and patriotic to leap from hiding places more than a quarter of a century deep. What more remains for us to do, comrades, than to receive the benediction of this occasion, and of these surroundings, and of the holy memories stirred within us, and to go our way to the callings of life, so controlled by the principles of our order, that in the end we may hear the approving sentence, "Well done good and faithful servants."

Nevertheless, it is your wish, in accordance with the custom of the post, that something be said in addition to the ritual, and you have done me the honor to ask me to stand here, for a little while, to give utterance to the emotions which stir your hearts and the thoughts which fire your minds.

Why do we hold our dead to-night in such loving and sacred remembrance that we observe for them such a memorial service? First of all we may well say, because they belong to our generation, and hence they seem to be a part of ourselves. You will easily recall that marvelously graphic picture presented to us, wherein Spartacus refers to the man with whom to please the people of Rome, he had just fought, and whom he had just killed in the arena. "My early life," he says, "ran quiet as the brooks by which I sported; and when at noon, I gathered the sheep beneath the shade and played upon the shepherd's flute, there was a friend, the son of a neighbor, to join me in the pastime. We led our flocks to the same pasture, and partook together our rustic meal. To-day I killed a man in the arena, and when I broke his helmet clasps, behold he was my friend. He knew me, smiled faintly, gasped and died, the same sweet smile upon his lips that I had marked when, in adventurous boyhood, we scaled the lofty cliff to pluck the first ripe grapes, and bear them home in childish triumph." The touch of nature in this delineation is the fact that the sight of the face of the bleeding companion of his early life had turned Rome's fiercest gladiator, whose muscles were iron, whose heart was flint, once more into the poor, gentle, timid shepherd lad, who never knew a harsher tone than a flute note, so that upon his knees, amid the dust and blood of the arena, he begged the privilege of bearing away the body of his friend and of mourning over his ashes. Notwithstanding the assembled maids and matrons, and the holy virgins they called Vestals, and the rabble shouted in derision at the rare sport to see Rome's fiercest gladiator turn pale and tremble at sight of that piece of bleeding clay. For when Spartacus loosened the helmet clasps of the man with whom, to please the populace of Rome he had been forced to fight, and saw the face of his friend, he was no more Spartacus, the Gladiator, but the gentle shepherd lad of Syracusa.

In like manner, the faces of our dead, looking up into our faces to-night, carry us back through years of toil and care and struggle to the innocence of childhood, to the simplicity and purity of ambition of youth, and in spite of all the blunting of moral sensibilities in the moré of life, we are once more boys together; for

"Not wholly can the heart unlearn
Those lessons of its better hours;
Not yet has Time's dull footsteps worn
To common dust that path of flowers."

Such a service as this then has significance in the fact that it carries us back through the long years to the beginnings of life, to the sweet companionships of days free from simulation and dissimulation, and full of the lofty aspirations of youth, so that thus communing with the past, we find ourselves, despite the ravages of time, still possessed of "relics of joy which fate at her worst can never destroy." For

"The dreams we loved in early life
May melt like mist away;
High thoughts may seem mid passions
Strife

Like Carthage in decay;
And proud hopes in the human heart
May be to ruin hurled,
Like smouldering monuments of art
Heaped on a sleeping world.
Yet there is something will not die,
Where life hath once been fair;

Some towering thoughts still live on high;
Some Roman lingers there."

Happy will it be for us, comrades, if the stirring of such memories within us and the revival of the better nature by these services shall be permanent.

But we remember our dead to-night not alone for the comradeship of youth, but also for the comradeship of service in the army and navy of our country. The circumstances of a soldier's life are peculiar. Separated from home, and deprived of the halcyon, womanly ministrations of home, thrown into constant companionship with men, who are grouped together not as families, but as fragments of families, by the very exigencies of the case, there are times when soldier must be to soldier as father, or mother, as brother, or sister, as son or daughter, as friend to friend. The sweet-souled Annie wrote in the journal of his inner life:—"When all around a man is wavering and changing; when everything is growing dark and featureless to him in the far distance of an unknown future; when the world seems but a fiction and a fairy tale, and the universe a chimera, when the whole edifice of ideas vanishes in smoke, and all realities are penetrated with doubt, what is the fixed point, which may still be his? The faithful heart of a woman! There he may rest his head, there he will find strength to live, strength to believe, and if need be, strength to die in peace with a benediction on his lips." But how often in the exigencies of the camp, and of the march and of the battle-field and of the hospital, and aboard ship, we have seen comrade, in the absence of woman, minister to comrade with all the sympathy and tenderness of woman, or have ourselves been the recipients of that ministry—a ministry which has been all the more marked, because of the presence of a gentleness in hands otherwise rough, in speech otherwise coarse. For the ties which bind the hearts of the soldiers of the civil war are not simply the ties of common hardships and sufferings, but also of mutual sympathy and helpfulness.

The bond which binds together those who have passed through hardships and sufferings together is strong, but stronger than this is the bond of love for him, who, in the crisis of a soldier's or a sailor's life has been as a mother or a sister to him, bathing the heated temples and the parched lips with the cooling waters, fanning the fevered brow, tenderly supporting the weary head with his own blanket, and then uncovered, lying down beside the sick or wounded comrade, through the long night to keep unbroken watch. Surely the self-sacrifice of the soldier was not alone on the field of battle, but quite as often in the camp.

Who does not recall from the experiences of those dreadful days of war, many an incident of camp, of march, of battle-field, where the unselfishness of a true humanity appeared in parting with the last piece of hard-tack, in carrying the gun, or knapsack, of comrade footsore and weary, in risking life to take the canteen to the wounded? And who does not remember hours of weariness and despondency enlivened by the ready wit, the cheerful song, and when occasion required it, by the manly and strong piety of another? But it is not alone for these things that we remember our dead to-night. We hold them in grateful memory as, under God, the saviors of the land, in which we are permitted to-day in peace to dwell, and as having proven to the world the practicability of self government, the perpetuity of the institutions of freedom.

The Chaplain then recalled somewhat in detail the history of the great struggle which was begun for the perpetuity of the Union, but finally developed into a war for the bringing of the constitution and laws into conformity with the Declaration of Independence. Continuing, he said that the Northern armies fought to a successful conclusion a war which has achieved for the individual man what no other war of all the centuries has achieved. Our success kindled anew the spirit of freedom in the breast of every man upon whom rested the iron hand and heel of the tyrannies the old world, and the subsequent years saw the overthrow of Napoleon III., the establishment of republicanism in France, the separation of the civil and ecclesiastical powers in Italy, the emancipation of the serfs in Russia, and the increasing concessions to the people, the vigorous conflict reawakened and intensified in the British Isles, which seems sure to end in a confederation of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales after the similitude of the American Republic, the gradual freeing of the slaves in Brazil, all these are signs from others. But the soldier, who fought in our civil war, fought not for America only, but for man.

It is fitting, then, that aside from the feelings which are naturally stirred within us by our relation to our dead comrades, we remember them in this memorial service for what they did for the freedom of man as man, who, after he has discharged all his duties to his family and community and State and nation, must be left free to discharge those duties which he owes to himself and to his God.

It is thus, comrades, that we read history to-night, and for this reason, among other reasons, remember our dead, and dedicate ourselves anew to the cause for which we fought—the freedom not of a nation, but of humanity. And when many a century shall have passed since the last survivor of the civil war shall have been laid away to rest in the narrow home appointed for all living, there shall not be found a heart or hearts, a nation or nations, loving liberty, who will not look back upon the great war of freedom, which, by your devotion and the devotion of our dead was brought to a successful conclusion, without the conviction and the willing testimony that it was then through the travail of love of the Northern soldiers that freedom had, under God, its new and imperishable birth.

The address was delivered with much feeling and was listened to with close attention. "America" was then sung, and the post closed according to the memorial ritual.

Gen. Abbott, the head of the military order of Sons of Veterans, was present with the delegation from Camp 1, S. of V., a much interested spectator of the services.

Resolved, That we as veterans of the late war, remember him as a leader it was high honor to follow; a general both wise to plan and courageous to execute; and a commander who had the love as well as the respect of all who were under his control.

Resolved, That we will not forget those to whom his death is a double loss, but we extend our fraternal sympathy to the widow and orphans, with the hope that their sorrow may be softened by the reflection that it is shared by kindly hearts all over the land.
